Life Story Work

Help Handz Children Contact Centre provides life story work for children and young people to better support them in understanding and making sense of their past family history to prepare them for the future.

Some children and young people may have little understanding of why they don't live with their birth parent(s), the reason for them being in this situation or the events that occurred in their early lives to cause this to happen. As this can have a negative impact on their self-esteem and emotional wellbeing, life story work aims to help children and young people to better understand and accept their personal history.

Life story work is used to link the past with the present for children and young people who have been separated from their family member(s) for some time. This process includes gathering facts and information about the history and events with the significant people identified in the child's current and previous history being consulted. This gathering of information enables us to assist the child or young person to build a picture of their family history and better understand it. In turn, this helps the child or young person to better understand their history and begin to accept it enabling them to move forward with a greater understanding, security and assurances. A key part of life story work is also celebrating the child or young person's achievements.
